ECONOMIC COMMENTARY

Market review

November was a month of notable developments across both the economic and political arenas. It began with the October jobs report, which, despite recent distortions, underscored a resilient labor market. The U.S. elections resulted in a Republican sweep, and the Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) opted for a second rate cut, while inflation data showed a slight but expected uptick for October. The U.S. economy added a modest 12,000 jobs in October, a figure likely skewed by the impact of hurricanes and strikes. Downward revisions further dampened the outlook, removing 112,000 jobs from the prior two months. However, other indicators were more encouraging: the unemployment rate held steady at 4.1%, while wages, likely influenced by weather conditions, rose by a solid 0.4% month-over-month (m/m). Despite the weaker-than-expected report, the broader data indicated that the labor market, while cooling, remains solid. The following week, former President Donald Trump won the presidential election, securing both the electoral college and popular vote, alongside Republican majorities in the House and Senate. This outcome has set the stage for potential policy changes that could impact inflation and market dynamics, with key agenda items including tax cuts, higher tariffs, reduced immigration, and deregulation across various sectors.

In its penultimate 2024 meeting, FOMC unanimously voted to cut the federal funds rate by 25 basis points (bps) to a range of 4.50%-4.75%. During the press conference, Chair Powell cited progress on disinflation and employment data as factors the decision, although changes to the statement language suggest the Fed acknowledges disinflationary progress has somewhat stalled above 2%. With high levels of uncertainty, Powell provided limited forward guidance, leaving markets uncertain about the pace and destination of future cuts.

While inflation has been moving closer to the Fed's 2% target this year, the October CPI report showed a slight but anticipated uptick. Headline CPI rose 0.2% m/m, which, partly due to base effects, pushed the annual increase to 2.6%, while core inflation rose 0.3% m/m and 3.3% year-over-year (y/y). Food prices continued to climb, while energy prices remained flat. Apparel prices experienced their softest print since 2020 at -1.5% m/m, likely due to unseasonably warm weather. In more welcome news, auto insurance prices fell modestly, although this was offset by a rise in airfares. In October, headline PCE grew 0.2% m/m, bringing the yearly figure to 2.3%, a modest increase from the previous month.

The month concluded with the second estimate of Q3 GDP, which remained unchanged at 2.8% annualized, marking a second consecutive quarter of above-trend growth. Consumer spending continued to drive the economy forward, rising a downwardly revised but still strong 3.5%, while government spending also looked strong. Overall, the economy remained solid. Front end Treasury bill yields declined, while longer Treasury yields remained elevated throughout most of the month before ending lower, as economic data continued to weaken the case for aggressive rate cut. Three-month Treasury bill yields declined by 6 bps to 4.49%, while six-month Treasury bill yields fell by 1 bp to 4.45%. One-year Treasury yields ticked up slightly by 2 bps to 4.29%, while two-year Treasury yields edged lower by 2 bps to 4.15%.

Outlook

Despite a cumulative 75 bp reduction in rates over the last two meetings, the Fed believes its current policy stance is still restrictive. However, with its data-dependent approach, the Fed's outlook for further easing hinges on the overall health of its dual mandate. With inflation nearing its target, the unemployment rate close to full employment, slowing wage growth, and a moderate pace of payroll expansion, we anticipate the Fed will continue to normalize the policy rate with an additional 25 bp cut in December, moving closer to a neutral stance.

As we look ahead to 2025, the committee appears inclined to further reduce rates to alleviate restrictive pressures on the economy, while being cautious not to stoke inflation. Although proposed tariff policies could exert upward pressure on prices, short- to medium-term disinflationary forces remain in place. If improvements in auto insurance and shelter inflation, along with wage pressures, persist, inflation should remain on a favorable path. This would provide the Fed with the flexibility to implement additional rate cuts next year, supporting a soft landing for the economy.

ECONOMIC COMMENTARY

Market review

Despite uncertainties arising from the U.S. election, evolving monetary policy, and heightened geopolitical tensions, 2024 emerged as a remarkable year for the economy and financial markets. The economy is on track for a year of above-trend growth, driven by a resilient consumer base, while the labor market has stabilized in a relatively healthy state. Simultaneously, moderating inflation has enabled the Federal Reserve (Fed) to begin easing policy after a prolonged pause.

In 2024, the economy exhibited unexpectedly robust growth, despite still restrictive interest rates and higher prices for goods and services. The third estimate for third-quarter GDP revealed an upward revision to an annualized rate of 3.1%. This increase was largely fueled by a surge in exports and strong consumer spending, although it was partially offset by reduced private inventory investment and higher imports. Over the first three quarters, the average annualized growth rate was 2.6%, with consumer spending playing a pivotal role, contributing approximately 75% of the overall GDP growth.

The labor market showed resilience in November, rebounding from disruptions caused by strikes and hurricanes in the previous month. Nonfarm payrolls increased by a solid 227,000, surpassing expectations, with upward revisions adding 56,000 jobs to the prior two months. The private sector accounted for 85% of this job growth, with health care and leisure and hospitality sectors adding 72,000 and 53,000 jobs, respectively. Elsewhere, wages rose 0.4% month-over-month (m/m) and 4.0% year-over-year (y/y), while the unemployment rate edged up to 4.2%. Overall, the labor market remains robust, although the stability in wages and the slight increase in the unemployment rate shifted the expectation toward a December rate cut.

Meanwhile, the November Consumer Price Index (CPI) report indicated that progress on disinflation had stalled, yet underlying details suggested positive momentum persists. Headline CPI rose 0.3% m/m, with base effects pushing the annual increase to 2.7%, while core inflation remained steady at 0.3% m/m and 3.3% y/y. Inflation appeared most pronounced in sectors aligned with resilient mid-to-upper income consumption, such as autos, travel, leisure, and recreational services. However, many of these segments are volatile and do not appear to be on an upward trend. In more welcome news, inflation in shelter and auto insurance eased, rising by 0.3% and 0.1%, respectively. On the other hand, headline and core Personal Consumption Expenditures (PCE) came in slightly below expectations, rising 2.4% and 2.8% y/y, respectively. As base effects become more favorable and core services disinflation continues, inflation may resume its steady decline toward 2%.

At its final meeting, the Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) reduced the federal funds rate by 0.25% to a target range of 4.25%-4.50%, completing a total reduction of 100 basis points (bps) in 2024. The statement took a more hawkish turn, changing the language from “considering additional adjustments” to “considering the extent and timing of additional adjustments” to the target range, suggesting the Fed may pause rate cuts at its next meeting, maintaining flexibility based on evolving data.

The updated Summary of Economic Projections (SEP) also leaned hawkish. It acknowledged resilient economic growth, reduced downside risks to the labor market, and slower progress on disinflation. The SEP projected higher growth and lower unemployment for 2025, along with increased inflation forecasts for 2025 and 2026. Additionally, it suggested a more cautious approach to rate cuts, with the committee expecting just two rate cuts for 2025, compared to four in the September SEP. Notably, a few members considered potential fiscal policies and tariffs into their estimates. The pace of rate cuts is expected to be more gradual and will remain contingent on the evolution of economic data.

With the Federal Reserve’s policy rate reduction in December, yields on U.S. Treasury bills declined. In contrast, longer-term Treasury yields rose, influenced by heightened long-term growth and inflation expectations under the new administration. Three-month and six-month Treasury bill yields both fell by 17 bps to 4.32% and 4.27%, respectively. One-year Treasury yields decreased by 14 bps to 4.15%, while two-year Treasury yields increased by 9 bps to 4.24%.

Outlook

As we transition into 2025, uncertainty continues to loom over the markets. In the wake of the election, there is considerable speculation about the policies the incoming administration might implement and their potential economic impacts. With Donald Trump’s re-election as president and the Republican sweep of Congress, significant policy shifts are anticipated, adding a layer of complexity to the economic outlook. Trump’s agenda focuses on four major policies: tax cuts, increased tariffs, reduced immigration, and deregulation across various sectors. Extending the Tax Cut & Jobs Act, set to expire at the end of 2025, along with pursuing deregulation, is generally seen as supportive for growth. However, proposed tariffs and immigration policies could drive up prices, pushing inflation higher. However, the timing and scale of these policies remain uncertain, making their impacts difficult to predict. That said, none of the proposed policies appear to spell trouble for the economy, at least in the short run; and 2025 should be another year of expansion, likely at a trend-like pace.

Meanwhile, with inflation trending lower and the labor market normalizing, the Fed cut interest rates by 100 bps since September 2024. Although the Fed still views its current policy stance to be restrictive, it is notably less so than before, and it maintains a bias toward easing the policy rate until reaching a neutral stance. However, resilient economic activity and inflationary policies, if passed, could complicate this goal. A more gradual path of policy easing is likely, limiting any significant downward movement in rates. Until there is more clarity on President Trump’s policy agenda, the pace of rate cuts will continue to depend on incoming economic data. We anticipate that the Fed will implement up to two additional cuts in 2025 to further alleviate restrictive pressures on the economy, while remaining vigilant to avoid reigniting inflation.
